lessons in voice and piano at Western University in Quindaro, Kansas, for a short time. Later that year Boatner sang for the famous tenor Roland Hayes, who encouraged the young baritone to continue his vocal studies in Boston. Boatner followed Hayes' advice, and moved to Boston in 1917. In 1925, Boatner moved to Chicago, in order to complete his formal education. He earned his Bachelor's degree in music from the Chicago College of Music in 1932. During his student years in Chicago, Boatner directed the choirs at Olivet Baptist Church, and concertized widely as a singer. His reputation grew during the years 1925-1933, when he was director of music for the National Baptist Convention. In 1933, Boatner was appointed director of music at Samuel Huston College in Aushin, Texas. He later taught at the Wiley College in Marshall, Texas, where he was appointed Dean of Music. During the late 1930s, he settled permanently in New York City, where he opened the Edward Boatner Studio.

<head>Scope and Content Note</head>
Shortly after the death of Abraham Lincoln, William Henry Herndon began gathering material for a biography of his former law partner.
In 1885, Jesse William Weik brought new inspiration and assistance to the endeavor, and in 1888 Herndon's biography was completed through their joint effort. This collection of Lincolniana is the "fruit" of their research. The material covers the time period circa 1824-1933 and is divided into six groups: I: Arithmetic Book and Scrapbooks;
II: Correspondence of Lincoln; III: Legal Documents; IV: Papers of William Henry Herndon; V: Papers of Jesse William Weik; and VI:
Miscellany.
